Want to thank TFD for its existence? Link to this page: He 'elped me to lift the boxes and put them in the dray. We are working together for a common hobject, and any little 'elp I can provide is given freely.' "It was not my place, sir, to make any remark while in the dining-room, but I could not 'elp but overhear the conversation." "I didn't mean it Tommy, 'e was sniffin'; 'so 'elp me Gawd, I didn't mean it!" "I'll fix yer bloody well right," I sez, an' kept right after 'im. "I wish you'd give me a little something, and not be more vulgar than you can 'elp." "We couldn't 'elp noticing," said Cloke slowly, "from the times you walked there, that you an' your lady was drawn to it, but--but I don't know as we ever precisely thought--" His wife's glance checked him. "In addition, we have also managed to lower the production costs per watt." At Intersolar Europe in June 2011, Canadian Solar first showcased the ELPS solar PV cells to the public, now this breakthrough technology is being integrated into the company's module series. Any association can be made if the pairing is repeated and predictable (the same can be observed with humans). "Adds Sally Morgan, a holistic physical therapist who works with both pets and people, "To a dog, a spelled word or a pronounced word is no different -- just an arbitrary collection of sounds that have meaning," she explains in an email. "For example, instead of asking if Fido wants to go for a walk, every time say W-A-L-K instead. Everyone knows once a dog gets good and excited there's no going back. Tell a friend about us, add a link to this page, or visit the webmaster's page for free fun content. Even that didn't work for long. It wasn't long before spelling the word got the same reaction as saying it," explains the Augusta, Georgia resident in an email. That's why Pat Curry tried to outsmart her Australian shepherd, who became overwhelmed with joy upon hearing the word "bank," where she always was bestowed with treats from the drive-through teller. "If we weren't going to take her with us, we would spell B-A-N-K. He did this by ringing a bell when it was time to eat, at which time the pups salivated because they were simultaneously being presented with food. Once conditioned, they salivated when only a bell was rung, no food in sight. "My preferred method would be to just spell out the word before giving the object every time," she explains. When they learn that W-A-L-K means that you're going for a stroll around the neighborhood, they'll start getting excited about the spelling. "If you're trying to get your pooch to learn this or any other party trick, holistic physical therapist Morgan says it behooves you to ask nicely, using complete sentences. Then go grab the leash and take the dog on the walk. "In this instance, spelling out a word simply has replaced the full word. What they are learning is a precursor to a stimulus. When a repeated cue or precursor is paired with a given stimulus in a repeated fashion, the animals learn to predict a situation," explains Brian Ogle, lead anthrozoology instructor at Beacon College in Leesburg, Florida, in an email. This establishes a connection between dog and human, and again, increases the tendency of the dog to do as you requested," she says. Now That's CoolChaser, a famous South Carolina-based border collie, can differentiate between the names of at least a thousand objects, and can even identify them by subcategory (balls, toys, frisbees). "Therefore, I could easily teach my dog 'w-a-l-k' instead of saying 'let's go for a walk' or 'walkies'. In fact, I think he would learn this within 3-5 times using the new phrase. "Most dog-owners are unwittingly conditioning pooches in classical Pavlovian style. "Dogs are not necessarily learning how to spell various words. ... Most dogs will quickly learn to associate the spelled-out word with the activity or object. That's one smart puppy. The Russian physiologist Ivan Pavlov figured out that the dogs he was studying could be conditioned to associate a stimulus (for the purpose of his experiment, a bell) that had nothing to do with eating, at mealtime, and thus elicit a mealtime-appropriate response (salivating). This is why it is most effective to speak to your dog in a whole sentence, using as well 'please' and 'thank you.' It is incredible how using polite language results in the dog doing what you ask nearly every time," she explains. There's actually a scientific reason behind this seemingly bizarre practice. As soon as she heard me tearing a check or a deposit slip out of the checkbook, she headed for the door. "Smart as she is, Curry's pup isn't going to be up for the Scripps National Spelling Bee anytime soon. So, when Curry began to spell out the word "bank," it wasn't long before her dog was conditioned to respond the same way than when she had previously heard the simple word because she picked up on the same cues. Most dogs are smart enough to participate in this type of associative learning, and it's not even hard to do, according to animal behavioral consultant Kayla Fratt with Cognitive K9. "So, we actually started saying 'the place where we put money' instead. "When we speak to dogs in full sentences, we are more likely to pause and gaze at them, stimulating the trust hormone oxytocin between us and within each of us. "Dogs learn our language over time, without us even trying to teach them specific names.
